Columel Clayton McMichael's Record as a Journalist and Man of Affairs-Colonel McClure's Physical Vigor and Literary Power-Versatile John Russell Young.

Nopyright, 1891, by American Press Association.]

If a Philadelphian were asked to point out three of the brightest lights in the sourmalistic profession in the Quaker City he would at once name Colonel Clayton McMichael, Colonel Alexander K. McClure and John Russell Young. There are half a dozen others who are well known abroad and at home, but the trio mentioned constitute a group of original, dashing and brilliant thinkers.

COLONEL CLAYTON M'MICHAEL Their fame is not bounded by any city or state lines. All three are entertaining talkers and -without any discredit to their oratorical powers-still better writers. Each in his turn has enjoyed the confidence and friendship, and, in at least two cases, the affection of a president of the United States. In their journey through life they have rubbed un against greatness and tipped elbows with many master minds.

Colonel Clayton McMichael, the editor and proprietor of The North American, was once described as "the youngest editor of the oldest daily." That was some years ago-not so many either. He is but the silver threads are beginning to appear here and there. Colonel McMichael is a "working" journalist in the fullest sense of that frequently misused term. He generally reaches The North American office about 2 o'clock in the after-noon. It is not until the state house bell has telled the hour of 2 in the morning that he finally leaves his sanctum. He has two "dens." One is on the first foor, in the rear of the business office, He generally receives visitors there during the afternoon. The other is in the parlor of the building, where he does his writing in the evening. Colonel McMichael is a man of pleasing address. A stranger is at once struck with his case and grace and gentlemanly manner. He talks sincerely and vigoronsly, and has an emphatic style of expressing himself that can leave no doubt as to what he means to say. He has what are sometimes called "speaking eyes." When his gaze first rests upon you it seems to penetrate through and through, but just about the time von are considering the advisability of retreating the eyes light up with a kindly and reassuring glance and you feel that you are at home and with a friend.

The last time ex-President Cleveland visited Philadelphia some one mentioned the name of McMichael. stantly the ex-president exclaimed: "Tell Colonel McMichael I was asking for him. Don't forget to convey to him my very best regards." Thereby hangs a tale. Every one acquainted with life at the national capital remembers Colonel McMichael's reign as marshal of the District of Columbia, President Arthur, who has himself been aptly described as "the first gentleman of his ime," when he selected Colonel Mc-Michael for the post, selected a congental gentleman who was also his warm personal friend. The position of marshal of the district at that time was raised to a plane that it had never reached before and that it has never attained since. When Mr. Cleveland assumed the presidency he found Colorel McMichael's resignation on his desk. He refused to accept it and asked as a favor that the marshal serve out the remainder of his term-a matter of a few two gentlemen. Colonel McMichael lives in elegant style on West Walnut street. He is fond of social life and enjoys the theater. He has had a military career that any man might be proud of. He was twice wounded in battle. He is a fluent after dinner talker, and as a writer his productions are noted for their case, grace

having many enemies. For all tms, no one among his contemporaries has a greater influence or wields more power than Colonel McClure. He stands over six feet in height, is straight as an arrow, and in the masculine meaning of the word is really a handsome man. He has a powerful personality that gives a more than ordinary value to what he writes. A little more than ten years ago, when the McLaughlin Bros. founded The Times, McClure was made the editor in chief. The value of a name may be appreciated when it is stated that from that day to this the paper has been known as "McClure's Times."

Colonel McClure is just entering the autumn of life. The snow white hair and as the earl left he was hooted at and mustache, however, should not be and attempts made to strike him. Colonel McClure is very fond of rural life and generally spends about six months of each year on his ten acre farm near Wallingford, in the suburbs of Philadelphia. The colonel claims that he is a farmer, but his friends ridicule the idea. They say the only things he cultivates They say the only things he cultivates are sarcasm, irony and invective. Be that as it may, the air of Wallingford generally brings the roses to the colonel's cheeks.

He is a brilliant and audacious writer, and has the credit of knowing more about inside politics than any man in Pennsylvania. Strange as it may seem, the managers of both parties and the leaders of independent movements have all been in the habit of going to him for advice and guidance. Such is the versatility of his nature that they have all departed satisfied. The fact that he is sometimes hopelessly in the minority never disturbs the equanimity of Colonel McClure's mind. He has a logical and convincing manner of presenting his case-whatever that case may be. He spends from eight to ten hours a day at his office, is an inveterate tobacco chewer ist, and his writings exhibit a purity and finish that is very rare in newspaper work these days. He has the necessary knack of grasping a thought quickly. This was illustrated even in his youth. When Young was fifteen years of age The Press advertised for a "copy boy." There were fifty applicants. Each was handed a bit of Colonel John W. Forney's copy to decipher. No one that has not gazed upon that copy can imagine what a mass of unintelligible hieroglyphics it was. Young was the one boy in the crowd able to read it. He was engaged at five dollars a week. A month later, through his aptitude in reporting a chance fire, he was made a reporter. He has been in the newspaper ousiness from that day to this.

He was in Paris during the troublesome days of the commune, and wrote a water rushing down in funnels and exten column account of that affair. Wendell Phillips said that for purity of English and vividness of narrative it was unexcelled by the productions of Macaulay. Mr. Young is short and chunky, and walks along the street in a half musing, half abstracted manner. For some time past he has been running a series of articles in The Star on "Men and Memories," giving his impressions and personal recollections of such eminent people as Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Roscoe Conkling, Abraham Lincoln and Cardinal McCloskey. His success as United States minister to China is too well known for any extended comment, while his trip around the world with General Grant has be-GEORGE BARTON. come history.

Ammonia and alum are the most common adulterants used in the manufacture of baking powders. The gov-ernment report shows that a large per-centage of the baking powders on the market contain either one or the other, or both these pernicious drugs.

What woman would use an ammonia Such powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia gives to the complexion a sallow or blotched appearance. The presence of ammonia or alum in a baking powder, however, can easily be detected. To detect ammonia-Mix one heaping easpoonful of baking powder with one teaspoonful of water in a tin cup; boil thoroughly for a few moments, stir to prevent burning, and if ammonia is present you can smell it in the rising steam. Or, place a can of the suspected powder top down on a hot stove for s minute or two, then take off the cover

To detect alum-Alum powder can be tested by putting a couple of teaspoonfuls of the powder in a glass of cold water. If no effervescence, that is, bubbling or simmering, takes place, conlemn the powder and return it at once. Some alum powders, however, like the "Calumet," "Bon Bon," "Chicago

GONE TO THE JURY.

TORNEYS LOCK HORNS.

Does Some Clever Acting-Frank Cox Pleads for Virtue and Justice - Mrs. Redewell in Tears.

The Redewell case was argued yesterday between Messrs, Baker & Campbell and Judge Buck for the defendant and Messrs, Cox and Williams for the prose-

The speeches were all good. Judge Campbell, with his Othello-like manner, did some very clever acting, and made quite an impression on the jury and his audience. He pictured Mrs. Hudson as being devoid of everything that is pure and noble in a mother, and willing to drag the name and presence of herself and daughter into the court room and in public for the sake of a paltra $50. He said Mrs. Hudson and her daughter had lied upon the witness stand about different points in the case stand about different points in the case as had been proven by others, and he was certain they would lie about the principal facts of the case, and he hoped the jury would not let "that gir!" be the means of sending one of "Phoenix's law-abiding, good and reputable citizens" to the penitentiary for a number of years, casting shame and sorrow upon his poor old mother, beautiful wife and little children."

After Judge Campbell's argument of an hour and a half, the court took a recess untill 7 p. m., at which time it was called to corlor called to order.

Prosecuting Attorney Frank Cox had the right to the floor, which he held for an hour or more, holding his audi-ence and the jury spell-bound for that length of time.

At the close of his argument Mrs. A. Redewell, wife of the defendant, burst into tears and had to be escorted from the court room.

Mr. Cox pictured Clara Hudson in a manner that could not help but bring forth the heartfelt sympathy of his listeners, and said that he believed a man holding a position in society, crowned with prosperity in worldly goods, should be made to feel his evil doings more than a man who had been less fortunate and ignorant of the less. less fortunate and ignorant of the law and its consequences, and that virtue, above all else, irrespective of one's station in life and financial condition. should be honored and respected, and he trusted the jury would not let their sympathies for the defendant's family keep them from doing what was just and right, for unless justice was done, and right, for unless justice was done, the law was simply a farce.

At the close of his argument, Judge Gooding instructed the jury, making everything clear and concise, after which they retired to their room to deliberate on a verdict.

The argument closed at 8:30 p. m. Later-The jury on the Redewell case DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 2.—Last night, or alum baking powder if she knew it? could be reached, and adjourned court until today at 10 a. m.
